

Max Langweil

Why are Hardware and Software times different?

The hardware version is slower primarily due to communication latency. The overhead of transferring data over AXI and invoking computation in the FPGA fabric outweighs the performance benefits of hardware acceleration for this workload. Since the CPU can perform the operation directly without incurring this communication overhead, the software implementation executes faster.